Firefighters Fonda exercise programs

By Rebecca Pavitt Raney

Firefighters have a job that decreases their life expectancy by 10 years.

Their work often involves going from dead sleep to full alert within seconds, which takes an extensive toll on health.

To fight this problem, the area's larger fire departments are trying to improve firefighters' health — and increase their life expectancies — by mandating fitness programs.

The Foothill Fire Protection District in Rancho Cucamonga pioneered a fitness program five years ago. The Pomona Fire Department started one in December, and a program is just getting under way in Ontario.

"We're not trying to make Mr. Americas out of everybody," said Ontario fire Capt. Bob Tevis. "Hopefully, we can beat that national average and they can live for 20 years after retirement."

Short-term benefits of the programs are clear.

Injuries on the job have decreased by 30 percent since the Foothill firefighters started working out, said Division Chief Ron Mayfield.

Some Pomona firefighters have started eating better after medical screenings showed high cholesterol levels.

"The doctor explained to the guys and showed them quite graphically the consequences of high cholesterol," said Division Chief Ron Robertson. "It really woke some people up."

Under the programs, firefighters work out for an hour when they go to work. Their regimens, which emphasize cycling, walking and weight-lifting, are designed to help the heart and improve circulation.

The workouts also relieve the stress from a traditionally stressful job.

"It's a proven fact that if they're running and working out, then the stress will be naturally relieved," Mayfield said.

Fitness doesn't come cheap, however.

The Ontario Fire Department spent $17,500 for medical examinations to screen for potential health risks. Examinations in all the departments must be repeated each year.

The total cost to start Pomona's program was about $65,000, Robertson said.

That prohibitive initial cost discourages smaller departments from starting fitness programs. Most of those departments, such as La Verne and Montclair, provide workout equipment but do not mandate structured programs for their employees.

But those who have instituted the programs say they pay for themselves quickly.

"The long-term benefit is the city actually saves money on sick time," said Tevis of Ontario.

The size of the agency doesn't always dictate whether it mandates a fitness program, though. The San Bernardino County Fire Agency does not have a fitness program, though the Los Angeles County Fire Agency does.

There are barriers other than cost as well.

Like other departments, Upland fire officials have discussed starting a fitness program but have taken no action.

Firefighters there look at the programs with mixed feelings.

"You've got to look at it from the viewpoint of a guy who's been around for 20 years," said

County woos cities with cash-for-trash plan

By Richard Peraza

SAN BERNARDINO — The increase in trash bills this July will include a boost for a handful of cities.

Still in the formative stages, it's called the "host city incentive," a cash-for-trash program geared toward making a landfill in your back yard tolerable.

The accounting firm of Price Waterhouse has been instructed to include "a fair amount" for the proposed incentive in its study of new tipping fees. The findings will be recommended to the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors in July, Director of Solid Waste Management William Sterling told members of the Solid Waste Advisory Council last week.

Officials are reluctant to discuss how large that new hike may be, but say it will likely dwarf 10 and 20 percent increases of recent years because it will, for the first time, also include massive costs for finding and opening new landfills and for closing old ones.

Representatives of cities in which landfills are located have complained that, aside from an image of blight, there are economic disadvantages to having a landfill, Sterling said.

Among those costs are litter control and increased road repairs and maintenance because a steady stream of heavy garbage trucks is tough on asphalt.

"We need to be aware of the fact they (cities) have needs and assist with that," Sterling said.

It goes further than that, because a city can block establishment of expansion of a landfill in its boundaries, according to Colton City Manager Frank Berest.

"It's a new ball game here," he said, noting SWM officials would like to squeeze a few extra years out of Colton Landfill which now is in the process of closing.

"Somebody's got to make a very good case to Colton to keep that landfill open another three to five years."

Colton would like a regional park to replace the landfill when it closes — and also would like some park development money

Etiwanda eyes tax district for building new schools

Forming a community facilities tax district to raise money for building schools may be on the horizon for the Etiwanda School District.

Since the district expects to build a school every year for the next 15 years to keep pace with growth, administrators are looking at forming a Mello-Roos district in north Etiwanda, said

Superintendent Carleton Lightfoot.

The move, if approved by voters, would raise property taxes. The additional revenue then would be used to buy land for a new school, Lightfoot said. Although no official steps have been taken, a special election to form the tax district could be held as early as this year, Lightfoot said.

The district also may consider seeking general obligation bond money to pay for new schools. The outcome of the March 7 general obligation bond election in the Alta Loma School District will help Etiwanda school officials gauge whether to pursue one in their district, Lightfoot said.

Ray Brown, president of the Upland Firefighters Association.

"You're not in the best shape. What if they set standards and a guy can't meet those standards? It's the fear of the unknown. It's human nature to resist change."

Yet at the Foothill district, the 15 percent of firefighters who do not meet minimum standards — such as doing 20 push-ups in a minute — are placed on special programs to improve their weaknesses, Mayfield said.

In the long run, cities also may cut back on compensation as a result of the programs.

Pomona Division Chief Robertson noted that by law, any heart or lung problems a firefighter develops after five years on the job is presumptive to have come from the job.

"The city really owns a lot of this guy's body," Robertson said. "If you can keep him on a fitness program, as opposed to retiring them out early as a result of bypass surgery, then you're making an investment in their health."

as part of its host city incentive, Benest said.

Colton's not alone. "We're talking about closing down all our valley landfills in short order," Benest said, noting every valley landfill except San Timoteo in Redlands is slated for closure in less than five years.

He urged the council to adopt a formal policy supporting host city incentives.

"It essentially goes without saying that's going to be a policy," but it's too early to talk specifics, 2nd District Supervisor Jon Mikels said.

Host city incentives are a key part of current negotiations with the city of Rialto for expansion and extension of Mid-Valley (Fontana) Landfill, Mikels said.

That landfill is slated to close in less than two years, but the county has 160 acres adjoining the site which could extend it up to 20 years, SWM officials have said.

"I, for one, do not want to get ahead of those negotiations. I would rather see detailed discussion of it follow the negotiations with the city of Rialto," he said. The results "will set a pace for the rest of the county."

Club says forget sweat, tears, we just want blood

By Suzanne Sprout

Parkway Kiwanis Club members are involved in a blood feud and the community hopefully will get caught right in the middle of it.

Club members have mailed letters to 200 valley churches in hopes of getting their congregations involved in a concerted effort to donate blood. The Blood Bank of San Bernardino and Riverside Counties always needs donations but recent runs on blood have left the Ontario center short of the precious fluid.

So the club is challenging the 200 churches to do battle for the next month. Church members are asked to donate blood from now until March 31. All documentation concerning donations must be sent to the Parkway Kiwanis by April 15.

And besides the satisfaction of knowing they may have helped save a life, the club is offering cash incentive prizes.

"Our whole intent is to try and help the blood bank renew its supplies. We always are hoping to stimulate new donors in the community," said Dick Fleener, Parkway Kiwanis president.

Wayne Leavitt, Parkway member, said with a lot of church participation the program can't help but succeed.

"In this case, everyone will win," he said.

Because of a combination of rapid growth locally and recent flu outbreaks the blood bank has found its supplies dramatically tapped, according to Paul Sautter, blood bank director of donor resources.

Alta Loma board candidate holds huge war chest

By Natalie Shore
Staff Writer

School board candidate Walter Collins is financially miles ahead of his opponents in the race to fill a single trustee seat in the Alta Loma School District, according to statements filed with the San Bernardino County Registrar of Voters.

Only one of the original seven candidates, Gay Thomas, has dropped from the race. Although her name still appears on the sample ballot, Thomas withdrew in January due to increased demands on her silk-screen business, she said.

Collins, the candidate endorsed by the Alta Loma Educators Association, has amassed $2,910 in contributions to wage his campaign. The 59-year-old director of personnel at Mt. San Antonio College is married to a district secretary.

Feb. 23 was the last day before the March 7 special election for candidates to detail campaign finances, if they intend to collect more than $1,000.

Only one other candidate, Carolyn Preschern, plans to raise more than $1,000, but her current campaign statement was unavailable that day because it was erroneously mailed to Sacramento.

As of Jan. 21, Preschern collected $684 in contributions and loans.

With the exception of $270 of the candidate's own money, Collins' entire stockpile has been donated by the ALEA and individual teachers. The teachers union alone donated $500 to the Collins campaign.

As of Feb. 23's filing, Collins has spent 65 percent of his campaign funds.

Little Leaguers striking out

By Lee Peterson

Teen-age ballplayers will be hard to find in 1991, Rancho Cucamonga Little League leaders predict.

Willing youngsters will be in abundant supply, but they're afraid full-sized fields won't.

All the city parks in the works won't be ready in time to provide playing fields for the legions of Little Leaguers ready to play in the senior division, ages 13-18, league presidents said.

"We want a commitment to start construction of parks," said Dan Rosso, Vineyard Little League president.

So the city parks department plans to approach local school districts and Chaffey College with tidings of field renovations and lights, in exchange for use of the fields.

This would be the quickest way to make room for the growing leagues, Community Services Manager Joe Schultz said.

"We haven't abandoned these groups," Schultz said. "We have to find them a place. We are trying to work with them."

League presidents hope this is true, but are skeptical of how willing the schools will be to open their athletic fields.

Meanwhile the city will close for reconstruction some of the fields at Red Hill and Heritage community parks due to problems when they were originally built in 1987.

City Engineer Russ Maguire said the renovations had to be conducted in the midst of the baseball season due to both weather and time considerations.

The extensive repairs cannot be carried out during the rainy season, Maguire said. The restored fields cannot be trod upon right away.

Rosso, whose Vineyard League is based in the eastern part of the city, said he has been notified that his only senior division-size field will be lost when the Etiwanda Intermediate School expands in 1991.

The Vineyard Little League has grown from 20 to 40 teams in the last three years, Rosso said.

Mike Reynolds of the Deer Canyon Little League said his teams have fields for games but not for practices.

Successful kids make room for daddy early on

By Suzanne Sprout

Dads play just as important a role in the lives of their children as moms do.

And according to a recent Family Circle survey by the Gallup Organization, there is a direct correlation between the amount of time a dad spends with his child and how successful that child later becomes.

Of course, the survey doesn't define what "successful" means.

According to the survey, 50 percent of the fathers who spent a great deal of time with their children said they had successful children while 47 percent said their children were considered average; and 40 percent of the fathers who spent a moderate amount of time with their children said they had successful children while 37 percent said their children were considered average. At the other end of the time scale, 5 percent of the fathers who spent very little time with their children said their children were successful and 16 percent of the fathers called their children average.

"This isn't to say that mothers aren't important but it does say that fathers play an important role in the family," said Dr. Joanna Jones, coordinator of the childhood development program at Chaffey College.

"If dads aren't at home or around their children, and there are many single-parent households today, the children don't have as healthy a self-concept as they could. Fathers are extremely important."

"This isn't meant to put any guilt trips on any fathers but I would like to show them how wonderful it is to be with their children," Jones explained.

Jones said dads and moms contribute differently to the development of a child. Both parents add up to giving a child a full learning experience.

"I'm talking about fathers spending quality time not quantity time with their children and it's all purely personal. Ten to 20 minutes a day might be sufficient while one day a week may be needed," Jones said.

Many work under the misconception that boys need their fathers more than girls do. That simply isn't true, the professor said.

"Girls particularly need their fathers during their adolescent years. For age 3 to 6 girls identify with their mothers and look to see how their mothers relate to their fathers. From 13 to 16, girls begin to push away from their mothers and even flirt with their fathers to some degree but it's harmless.

"Boys are close to their mothers until about age 3 and then they start to identify with their dads. During the teen years, boys begin to emulate their dads," Jones said.

But although spending quality time with your children is essential, Jones warned that smothering your children by spending too much time with them can be detrimental, too. They must be allowed to grow and experience on their own.

Working sometimes seven days a week with the Pomona Unified School District cuts into the time that Jim Strang said he would like to spend with his five children.

"I try to spend 1½ to 2 hours with my family every day and sometimes that's hard but I've always thought it was important to do," said the Pomona father of five, whose children range in age from 13 to 21.

"Quality time is important and that's what I've tried to spend with them."

100-year-old barn downed by dozer and development

By Kimberly Heinrichs

The brittle wooden beams snapped as if they were toothpicks, crackling like the sound of gunfire under the force of the bulldozer.

In 15 minutes the 100-year-old barn once known as the center of a thriving citrus business — more recently as an eyesore — was gone.

The Stewart family barn at 175 W. Foothill Blvd. in Upland is only the first victim of the bulldozer as all the fixtures on the five-acre lot come down one by one.

"The decision was made about nine months ago to do this and that's when I cried," said Walter Stewart last week as he watched the heavy machinery do its work on the barns next to the home where his father was born before the turn of the century. The house, too, was to be gone by this week, he said. Some of the trees already had been uprooted.

None of the buildings has been used for a while, except by the opossum and rat sent scurrying by the crash of lumber.

The barn razing was an economic decision born out of economic necessity, he said. The adjacent 4 1/2 acres of lemon groves — the last Stewart family orchard — was not turning a profit.

"It costs as much to farm 5 acres as 10 acres. The water has become horrendously expensive," Stewart said.

His grandfather William Boyd Stewart created the Stewart Citrus Packing House in the late 1800s. A Pennsylvania native, he planted many of the original orchards in the city once dominated by citrus groves. Walter Stewart liquidated the organization two years ago.

"My grandfather built the house here and he set out the original orchards. My father kept it going. I guess I worked at it a number of years and put it to bed. I'm winding up the whole thing," he said.

Stewart and his wife Maggie share ownership with another partner in the Stewart Plaza a few blocks away on the southeast corner of Foothill and Mountain Avenue — which also once was an orchard.

Since closing down the orchards, Stewart has been semi-retired, he said.

Family still awaits word from boy gone 13 months

'We just keep holding on to hope': Shawn's mother

By Larry Altman

"Shawn is that you?" Barbara Betz hollered when the phone rang before Thanksgiving.

The line went "click."

"That might just be him calling to see if Mom and Dad are still there," Betz said late last month, 13 months after her now 12-year-old son, Patrick Shawn, disappeared.

Mrs. Betz, her husband Dennis, and three other children have no idea where the boy, who goes by his middle name, is.

"We just keep holding on to hope," Mrs. Betz said, her voice breaking as she spoke. "I'm not ready to give up yet."

Mrs. Betz last saw her son Jan. 20, 1988 at a Foothill Boulevard shopping center. He told her he was going with a friend to a basketball game in Chino.

He never arrived there and she never heard from him again.

The Betz family and detectives believe he ran away and Upland police Capt. Martin Thouvenall said there is no evidence of foul play.

"We don't have any indication to suspect that's the case," Thouvenall said.

Not knowing where Shawn is has taken a great toll on the Upland family.

Just before Christmas, Mrs. Betz packed away Shawn's baseball trophies and belongings because she could no longer face looking at them.

"You cry a lot," she said. "You're constantly seeing something that reminds you of him. You look at all the little boys you see down the street."

Shawn's disappearance probably took the greatest toll on his father, who needed rehabilitation after he began abusing alcohol and drugs within weeks after the boy left.

"Shawn, please come home. Mom and Dad still love you," Dennis Betz said.

Mr. Betz last saw Shawn that morning when he left for work.

"When I said goodbye I didn't think that it was goodbye," he said. "I keep thinking driving home from work: When I get home Shawn will be there."

During the past year, the family has circulated Shawn's photo throughout the valley and the boy's face has appeared on milk cartons and communiques throughout the country.

But police are baffled.

"We have had no contact with this young man and no sightings," Thouvenall said.

Shawn was due for a court hearing when he disappeared; he had had some problems with the law. Family members believe that might be why he ran.

Meanwhile, Shawn's parents wonder how their son is living, how he is making money to survive and who he is with.

They know he was always self-sufficient, making dollars here and there doing odd jobs at local shopping centers.

About three weeks before, Upland detectives questioned the family again to determine whether members have thought of anything new in the case, Thouvenall said. Detectives continue checking with agencies that deal with missing children, he said.

For now, Shawn's parents are turning their attentions to their other children: 18-year-old Pam, 14-year-old Chuck and Crystal, 6.

"I'm obviously more protective of that one," Mrs. Betz said, pointing at Crystal, who was sleeping on the couch. "I don't let her walk to school. She doesn't go out of my sight."

Ayala ready for Bader challenge

By Peggy Olsen

State Sen. Ruben Ayala, D-Chino, undaunted by a possible challenge from Assemblyman Charles Bader, R-Pomona, is rallying his supporters in a bid for re-election.

Dismissing Bader as no threat, Ayala said he nevertheless plans an early start in his campaign for re-election in 1990.

"I've filed the papers to raise funds for the senate seat. My first fund-raiser is set for May 12," said Ayala.

Although Ayala doesn't expect defeat, he said he never treats opposition lightly.

"The name of the game is opposition when you get into a partisan office. I expect opposition period. It doesn't matter who from. We won't treat him (Bader) any differently. We're going to organize and go (for the seat)," said Ayala, chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Water Committee.

While the Republican registration in the 34th District may be close to 40 percent, Ayala said he expects to pull some of those votes along with the Democratic vote.

Republicans, Ayala said, expect to win when the Democratic registration is 55 percent or less because the Democrats are not disciplined in voting. "Well, we can change that," said Ayala, who has represented the district for almost two decades.

While Bader has name recognition in the western area of the district, he is not well known in the eastern portion that includes Fontana, Grand Terrace, Rialto, San Bernardino, Bloomington and Highland.
